

Social Classes of Medieval Feudal Europe, and social classes of today, similarities and differences

Monarchs and dictators

- ◆ The similarities of a monarch and a dictator is that they both say everything, they can pass down down from family and there is no voting when they make a decision.
- ◆ The differences of a dictator and a monarch is that dictators rule on their , and monarchs have lords to help the him or her.

Lords and government

- ◆ Lords and government have a similarity. They get power from a high person and make laws, they make armies to defend the land, they got huge responsibilities.
- ◆ Lords were only one person per fief, governments stick together to discuss, lords used to be able to do what they want in their fief, governments have to have a really good reason to back their opinion.

Knights and Soldiers

- ◆ The similarity of knights and soldiers are that they protect the land, they get what they need, they defend the people and other important people.
- ◆ The difference is that knights used swords, and soldiers use guns, knights used the code of chivalry, and soldiers don't.

Peasants and Civilians

- ◆ The similarities of peasant and civilians are that they work for their family, the women train their children, and some civilians can't leave their country like serfs can't leave their land.
- ◆ The differences of peasant and civilians are that civilians pay in money not food like peasants, you couldn't change anything about your fate if you are a peasant you can't change your date but civilians can change their fate.
